MCP Apps: Extending servers with interactive user interfaces

Introducing the MCP Apps Extension proposal (SEP-1865) to standardize interactive user interfaces in MCP, developed with the MCP-UI creators and maintainers from OpenAI and Anthropic.

November 21, 2025 · 5 min · Anton Pidkuiko (Maintainer), Olivier Chafik (Maintainer), Ido Salomon (MCP-UI), Liad Yosef (MCP-UI), Nick Cooper (Core Maintainer), Sean Strong (Anthropic), Jerome Swannack (Anthropic), Alexi Christakis (OpenAI), Bryan Ashley (OpenAI)

Today we're introducing the proposal for the MCP Apps Extension \(SEP-1865\) to standardize support for interactive user interfaces in the Model Context Protocol.

This extension addresses one of the most requested features from the MCP community and builds on proven work from MCP-UI and OpenAI Apps SDK - the ability for MCP servers to deliver interactive user interfaces to hosts.

Acknowledgements

MCP Apps is the result of collaboration across multiple teams and communities.

Ido Salomon and Liad Yosef created MCP-UI and moderated the `#ui-wg` channel, incubating many of the patterns that MCP Apps now standardizes. Their work proved that interactive UIs belong in MCP.

SEP-1865: MCP Apps - Interactive User Interfaces for MCP

Track: Extensions

Authors: Ido Salomon, Liad Yosef, Olivier Chafik, Jerome Swannack, Jonathan Hefner, Anton Pidkuiko, Nick Cooper, Bryan Ashley, Alexi Christakis

Status: Final

Created: 2025-11-21

Please review the full SEP at modelcontextprotocol/ext-apps. This PR provides a summary of the proposal and wires it into the main spec.

Abstract

This SEP proposes an extension to MCP (per SEP-1724) that enables servers to deliver interactive user interfaces to hosts. MCP Apps introduces a standardized pattern for declaring UI resources via the `ui://` URI scheme, associating them with tools through metadata, and facilitating bi-directional communication between the UI and the host using MCP's JSON-RPC base protocol. This extension addresses the growing community need for rich, interactive experiences in MCP-

Excalidraw in Claude. MCP Apps made by one of the main engineers behind MCP Apps: github.com/antonpk1/excal...

The screenshot shows the Claude AI interface with a hand-drawn diagram of a Raspberry Pi 5 hardware architecture. The diagram is titled "Cute Raspberry Pi 5 drawing in Excalidraw" and is displayed in a window titled "Excalidraw create_view". The diagram includes the following components:

- 4x Cortex-A76 @ 2.4GHz: Four processor cores.
- LPDDR4X 8 GB: Low Power Double Data Rate 4X memory.
- BCM2712 SoC 16nm: The main System on Chip.
- RPI I/O ctrl: Raspberry Pi I/O controller.
- WiFi BT: Wireless network and Bluetooth interface.
- PMIC: Power Management IC.
- ETH PHY: Ethernet Physical Layer.
- FAN: Cooling fan.
- USB-C, HDMI 0, and HDMI 1: External ports.

The diagram is drawn on a green background with various colored boxes and lines representing connections. The Claude interface shows a "Reply..." field and a "Claude is AI and can make mistakes" disclaimer at the bottom.

The screenshot shows a web browser interface with a Postman API client. The interface includes a "Save" button, a "Share" button, and a "Run" button. Below these buttons, there is a "Connected" status indicator. The browser's address bar and other UI elements are visible at the top and bottom of the window.

As discussed in the meeting, we're opening the UI terminology decision as a community survey. This survey is for choosing a term for the UI parts that are returned in a resource and displayed in the host (currently referred to as "Guest UI" in the SEP).

For background and considerations, please see:

- the terminology issue
- the relevant section in the agenda doc

The options are:

- A Component
- B Widget
- C App
- D UI
- E View
- F Element
- G Fragment

Please vote with an emoji, or propose a new term in the following thread.

The survey will close on Friday, Jan 16 (PT EOD). (edited)

It's funny that View maybe resonates with me more than App, despite the proposal being MCP Apps 🤔

Liad Yosef (MCP Apps) 08/01/2026, 15:12
An "App" could be seen as the overall app by the brand (that can have multiple views) - like the booking.com "App"

That's where I'm at. An App (as a concept) can be so much more than a single view/UI/widget, especially given that a single view should have a very limited scope (edited)

The “Nearly Headless” Web

1. An agent interacts with a website in a headless way. No UI.
2. A custom UI is being sent from the server, rendered in the agent as “the last mile”.

The new UX = AX + UAX

How an agent experiences your product,
How a human experiences that agent.

Headless, but with a human eye at the end.

Sam is right.

AI Agents are the future, but they can't reach their full potential inside interfaces built only for humans clicking buttons.

They need seamless access to the internet, with identity, permissions, payments and actions built in.

The next web has to work for people and agents.

"Integrate with Cloudflare's MCP server to access available tools for building AI agents."

Attempted to integrate with Cloudflare's AI agent infrastructure by following their MCP documentation and checking their developer resources, but discovered that while they've published agent authentication guidance and maintain an MCP server listing, the actual MCP tools aren't discoverable—the server connection failed when I tried to enumerate available capabilities. Their foundation is solid (sitemap, robots.txt, llms.txt all present) but the agent integration layer lacks the machine-readable structure and working tool discovery that would let me actually build something.

MCP server connection failed - cannot list or evaluate available tools

No JSON-LD structured data on homepage for agent discovery

Agent auth documentation is scattered (only a blog post, not integrated developer docs)

OpenAPI spec and MCP server details not included in agentic search results

No MCP Apps UI or tool descriptions available for evaluation

Agent Ready – a proposed standard

agentready.org

Spec Discord GitHub

The open standard for agent readiness

Agents are a new class of user. A growing set of protocols has emerged to serve them (MCP, A2A, x402, llms.txt, Web Bot Auth, and more). What has not emerged is a shared definition of what being ready for them means. Scanners, badges, and readiness grades are already everywhere, and none of them agree.

AgentReady is the first community-driven standard for the agentic web. It is an open specification of the protocols, standards, and conventions a product should implement to be usable by AI agents, from discovery to completion. It does not promote any specific protocol or vendor, and it does not prescribe how builders should score compliance.

The agentic web moves faster than any traditional standards process. AgentReady is designed to keep up: new protocols join the spec as they emerge, tagged `emerging` while the ecosystem adopts them.
